To elaborate on Rushdie's epic-like novel is to fathom the unfathomable. Faced with this Herculean task, I would like to express foremost gratitude to no less a person than Dr. Morris Wei-hsin Tien because his knowledgeable and thoughtful make this research eventually possible. I am also so much obliged to Dr. Hanping Chiu and Dr. Susan Jung Su for their perspicacious comments and valuable suggestions.

I wish to thank a lot of friends who have been keeping me company while I have been constantly disturbed by mood swings over the past few years. Of all the friends, my special thanks are due to Fangrong Hu, for she always spurs me on to the completion of the thesis and provides me with computer-specific assistance as a computer aficionado.

And last but not least, I must say I am deeply indebted to my loving family, including a buddy doggy named Dodo. No matter how far away I stay from them and no matter how depressing and turbulent my life gets to be, they always get my heart moored to them, hence a feeling of warmth and security. I also gratefully acknowledge the great help offered by a loving friend, Yuting Shih, who is literally my family as well. But for her encouragement, I would not have considered getting my master's degree in English literature. She is the very person who initiates me, figuratively and literally, into a world of beauty.
