

Acknowledgements

I want to express my deep indebtedness to my advisor Prof. Chin-yuan Hu, who has initiated me into the studies of epistolary literature. In the process of thesis writing, Prof. Hu's comments and suggestions help me focus on several issues crucial to the main concerns of my thesis. In addition, I appreciate Prof. Hu's careful reading and correction of my writing. I have learned a lot in the revisions of the writing and the structure. I also thank Prof. Hu for giving me an opportunity to attend her 2004 graduate course "Epistolary Literature." In that class, I had an opportunity to present the main ideas of my thesis and accordingly acquired many useful suggestions, which further help my preparation for the oral defense. Furthermore, Prof. Hu has offered me valuable advice on my study of the MA program. Her advice inspires me to approach literature from a critical and creative perspective.

I also want to thank Prof. Han-ping Chiu and Prof. Chien-chi Liu for their insightful comments on my thesis in the oral defense. Their comments call my attention to some related issues which may well be explored in the future. In addition, I appreciate both Prof. Chiu's and Prof. Liu's curricular instructions during my study of the MA program, which have amplified my theoretical background for literary research.

To my parents, I am heartily grateful for their unfailing support, both in the emotional and the financial aspects. During the time of thesis writing, they were very patient with me. From them, I learn that it is important to try my best to strike a balance between my study, my health, and my daily life. The effort to maintain an adequate balance between my thesis writing and my life is very stimulating to my thinking from various angles. To my brother and my sister, I want to express thanks for being considerate when I need help or suggestions.
