

To my beloved mother and respectable Professor Shuan-hung Wu

Acknowledgments

Like all projects of this kind, this thesis could not have been produced without the support and assistance of a large number of people whose names I could not all list here but whose kindness and encouragement I will always bear in mind.

I am deeply indebted to Professor Chien-chi Liu, my thesis advisor, for his extreme patience, kindness, tolerance and encouragement. In the process of thesis writing, he generously lent me his valuable collection of criticism on Naipaul's works and kindly gave me space and freedom to develop ideas at length and in depth and to organize the overall structure of the thesis. Though bearing an enormous load of academic work, he still managed to read my draft meticulously. I am also obliged to professor Hsiu-chih Tsai and Professor Tsui-fen Jiang for their valuable advice on my thesis in the oral defense. Professor Tsai's positive response to my thesis encouraged me greatly and reminded me to be confident about having my own thoughts. Her insightful and critical comments aroused my interest in some related issues which may be well explored in the future. Professor Jiang's careful reading and grammatical correction of my thesis helped me improve my writing skill.

In addition to my advisor and the committee members, I would also like to express my deepest gratitude to Professor Yen-bin Chiou and Professor Yin-i Chen for their continuous support and encouragement during the writing of this thesis and throughout my graduate studies. Many thanks to them for their genuine care and timely support particularly when I felt extremely depressed.

I am grateful to Hung-I Wu, a deputy TA of Graduate Program at the office of the Department of English, for her assistance with administrative work. I also extend my special thanks to the librarians at NCCU, who were very helpful in arranging inter-library loans and procuring many articles for me at short notice.

I wish to thank those who spent time reading parts of this thesis and provided me with precious suggestions; among them are Ching-sung, Laurie, Tina and Ting-jia, who deserve a special mention for their warmth and friendship and should be singled out for special thanks. I owe them a great deal. In spite of their busy schedules, they were willing to spare time to read my thesis carefully and their critical remarks have inspired me significantly during our discussions over Naipaul. I am also very grateful for Andy Rathmann's scrupulous proofreading and Sean's opinions about my thesis.

My thanks also go to all my friends who have cheered me up all along, particularly Audrey, Shu-yin, Ysanne, Stacie and Eugenia. Audrey encouraged me constantly and offered me her incisive comments on specific chapters. I want to thank her for lending me a helping hand, a sympathetic ear, and a strong shoulder as I worked on this thesis. Shu-yin, Ysanne, Stacie, and Eugenia helped me through many of the most depressing days. Without their love and support, I would not have recovered from depression. Among the many others to whom I am also greatly indebted are Ming-shan, Shih-wen, Ching-yi, Feng-shan, Chiung-fang, Zoe, Chien-mei, Yu-feng, Hsiao-fen, Angela, Leonard, Emily, Winnie, Kaku, Helen, Yi-ling, Joyce, Joanna, Brenda, Brian, Shih-yin, Beryl, Nella, Linda, Wei-chiao, Wan-chen, my uncle and aunt, Po-ya and Hsiao-hui. All of them at one time or another have helped me go through the most difficult time of my life. I owe a great debt of gratitude to them for friendship. Besides, I owe particular thanks to Te-chung, an easy-going and kind-hearted man, who always patiently helped me with all my computer problems and lent me his computer. I am grateful to him for his generosity and kindness.

I wish to express my sincere and utmost appreciation to Professor Shuan-hung Wu for his precious knowledge, guidance and constant encouragement throughout my graduate years. His illuminating and inspiring lectures on contemporary theories and cultural studies during the course of my graduate study had enlightened me and laid the ground for the critical perspectives in my thesis. It was his valuable suggestions that I finally decided to discuss V. S. Naipaul's A Bend in the River in my thesis. His insightful comments on my second and third chapters redirected my then unsympathetic course of discussion and reshaped the gist of my argument. His stimulating ideas not only pushed me to think critically but also reminded me to face up to my own inadequacies as a MA student. But for his constructive advice, this thesis would not exist in its present form. In addition to his intellectual stimulation, Professor Wu's constant encouragement, care and support during the course of my MA studies made my years at NCCU pleasurable and memorable. He is one of those who helped me go through the most difficult time of my life. I owe a great deal to Professor Wu. I would like to repeat my deepest thanks to him. He is not only a sagacious scholar I have admired so much but also a considerate mentor who patiently helps his students with care and love. Many thanks to Professor Wu.

Finally, I want to give my heartfelt thanks to my family and to Chun-li. My mother's financial and emotional support helps me go through the hardships in the process of my academic pursuit. From Chun-li, I learned how to lead a positive and optimistic life. Their deep love, tolerance, and support cannot be easily repaid by words.

To those who love me and those I love, I dedicate this thesis.
