This thesis has been a painstaking product of mine, interrupted several times physically and intellectually due to many factors. I owe many thanks to a number of people. The first one I am most obliged to is my advisor, Dr. Tsui-fen Jiang, who willingly promised to be my advisor at once when I encountered frustrations in the writing process. Without her guidance and endurance, I could never overcome those mental obstacles, let alone accomplish this thesis successfully. Dr. Tsui-fen Jiang is a learned and respectable scholar. I really appreciate her kindness and patience. I am also indebted to Dr. Eva Y. I. Chen, one of my committee members, who had inspired me a lot in the graduate school and offered me lots of valuable suggestions. The other committee member I am grateful to is Dr. Hsiu-chih Tsai, who kindly agreed to be my committee member and gave me many precious comments on my thesis. Moreover, I would like to thank two teachers in Tamkang University, from whom I received warmth and encouragements. My special thanks go to Dr. Hsi-hsi Yu, who encouraged me to “march forward bravely,” and Dr. Pei-fen Sung, who cared and supported me a lot.

Most importantly, I would like to express my sincere gratitude for my parents and my younger brother, who loved and gave me full supports when I was facing the trial of my life, once resulting in my loss of belief and intellectual stasis for a period of time. Now I am glad that I could stand up with their supports, regain trust in myself, and appreciate those people who love and support me in my life.

Moreover, there are many friends I intend to thank in the process of writing my thesis. Sincere thanks go to Wei-ming, who took me out of the predicament of powerlessness and self-abandonment. With his love and supports, I could conquer the difficulty finally. Besides, I would like to thank Julian and Kailing for they gave me many helpful comments and suggestions. I am also grateful to my senior friends of the Ph.D. program, who encouraged and provided me with warm encouragements and advices. They are Bing-yong, Yi-jen, Yang Lin and Kao-chen.

Furthermore, I am also thankful to my classmates, including Ruth, Matt, and Theodore, with whom I shared many precious learning experiences and memories. I also thank my college bosom friends, Sunny, Rita, Edmund and Nancy, who gave me sincere encouragements and supports during my writing process. In addition, many thanks go to Yan-zhen, Kendra and Dai-hua, who always supported me when I was in need. I am really grateful to many great friends as well, like Po-yau, Meilum, Hui-ching and Pablo. I also appreciate friends who encouraged me throughout my writing process, such as Ko-kang, Wei-wei, Lin-chi, Chi-yi and Yining. I thank those who have helped, accompanied, and encouraged me all the way. Here I dedicate this thesis to them.
